

How Do I Change Someone's World?

Dear Friend,

Does this describe how you feel?

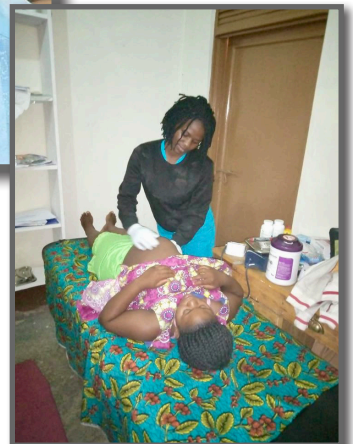

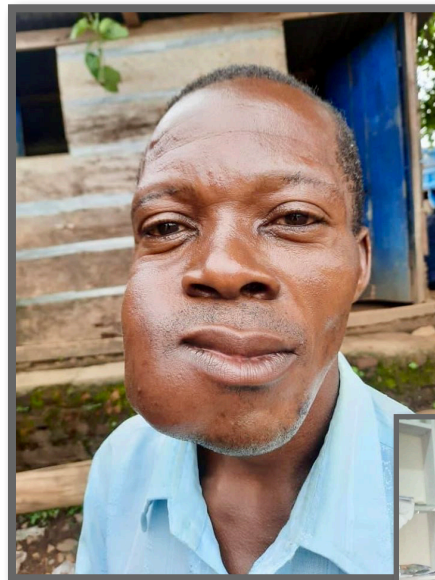

- ☛ You bet I would like to change someone's world.
- ☛ Show me how, and I'm in.

People should not have to deal with frequent, unnecessary death. It is not OK. (I put that in larger, bolder letters so you wouldn't miss it.)

In the forgotten villages of western Uganda, unnecessary death has been normal for a hundred generations, but it is not normal anymore. Ourganda is rewriting the rules, creating a new reality, winning the fight against unnecessary death.

It is completely wrong to allow unnecessary death when it is so easy to prevent it.

Ourganda saved Zebrina's life. And Agnes's life. And hundreds of others are alive, healthy, and happy because our medical teams roll into their villages every single week with a strong dose of love and hope. Their M.O. is education, medications, and prayer — wrapped in kindness. Right now, our care teams are helping Lonet, Aidah, Kosiya, and Elisa.

Like you, we feel angry when people suffer needlessly. So, we hired the smartest, most compassionate people anywhere. They are in the process (listen to this; this is fantastic) — they are in the process of transforming miserable, desperate villages into human flourishing zones.

And that means this: When you make a generous gift to Ourganda, you change someone's world.

You are the hero in someone's story. If your gift is $8, you bought a birthing kit for a pregnant mom. (The hospital won't admit her when she is in labor unless she brings her own birthing kit.) A gift of $200 buys water filters for five families. Send $1,000 and you have saved Elisa's life with a surgery. Or you can bring clean water to an entire village or maybe multiple villages for $10,000 or $20,000.

You can change someone's world. You can right a wrong. You can partner with our care teams as they rewrite the rules for long-term health and human flourishing in the villages Ourganda serves.

Thank you for changing someone's world!

Thank you for caring.
